

Ratos company SSEA signs contract with the Swedish Police Authority and Hemsö to build a new police building in Borlänge

The construction company SSEA, which is part of SSEA Group, has signed an agreement to build a new police building in Borlänge. The agreement is a collaboration contract and includes project development and production.

The police building will be built at the Gymnasium 2 property in Borlänge. The finished premises will comprise 20,000 square metres, and the building will be customised according to the Swedish Police Authority's need and requirements. The project is divided into two phases and is being carried out in a partnership between SSEA, Hemsö and the Swedish Police Authority. Project development and preparations for production will be completed in Phase 1, while Phase 2 will focus on contract completion.

"The construction companies in the Ratos family are building a sustainable society. This includes being a world leader when it comes to building in wood – and being trusted to build society's most important properties. As the owner, we're pleased with this development and would like to congratulate SSEA on an impressive collaboration contract with the Swedish Police Authority and Hemsö," says Christian Johansson Gebauer, Chairman of the Board of SSEA Group and President Business Area Construction & Services, Ratos.

"We're proud of the trust placed in us to work with organisations like the Swedish Police Authority and Hemsö. Our partnering model is attractive when procuring this kind of project. Building Borlänge's new police building is an important step for SSEA's development in the region," says Christian Wieland, CEO of SSEA and SSEA Group.
