Construction begins on Attendo's new nursing home in Upplands-Bro, Sweden

Today the construction begins for Attendo Norrbodahöjden, a new nursing home in Upplands-Bro, northwest of Stockholm, Sweden. The new nursing home will accommodate 80 apartments and will have a focus on culture and entertainment, with social interaction, activities and experiences forming a natural part of everyday life.

Attendo Norrbodahöjden is designed with a focus on safety, accessibility and person-centered care tailored to everyone's needs. The new nursing home will provide a modern living environment with good opportunities for social interaction, activities and a meaningful everyday life.

"We are very pleased to start the construction of Attendo Norrbodahöjden. Our ambition is to create a nursing home where residents feel safe and receive high-quality care tailored to their individual needs. Culture and entertainment will be an important part of the daily life, offering residents many opportunities for social interaction, activities and experiences," says Jonas Unger, Regional Director, at Attendo.

The need for elderly care is growing as more people reach an older age. Attendo Änggården is part of Attendo's long-term commitment to developing new care homes in areas where demand is increasing. Attendo is continuing to expand its high-quality care services and is now increasing the pace of development to create more capacity for the future.

The nursing home is designed to support both social interaction and independence. Shared areas and modern solutions will contribute to a safe and pleasant environment for residents while providing good conditions for employees to deliver high-quality care.

Construction is now underway, and the nursing home is planned to open in 2028.
