AddLife acquires Unicom Sistemas Analíticos Lda

AddLife has acquired Unicom Sistemas Analíticos, a leading Portuguese distributor of advanced analytical laboratory equipment. The company will be included within AddLife's Business Area Labtech.

Unicom Sistemas Analíticos is a Portuguese company distributing advanced analytical laboratory equipment to universities, research institutions and industrial customers. The company has annual revenue of approximately EUR 10 million and 20 employees. Operating since 1991, Unicom offers instruments, consumables, technical support, service and training in chromatography, spectrometry, and microwave technology. The company has a strong market position in Portugal, an excellent reputation for quality and service, and long-standing customer relationships.

"Unicom has built a strong market position in Portugal, combining deep specialist expertise with long-standing customer relationships in chromatography, spectrometry, and microwave technologies. This is fully aligned with our strategy of acquiring advanced laboratory instrument companies that also sell consumables and provide services. Together with Unicom's strong leadership team, we see significant opportunities to support the company's continued development and growth," says Mattias Bengtsson, Vice President, BioMedical & Research, AddLife.

The acquisition strengthens AddLife's position in advanced laboratory technology and complements the existing portfolio of products and solutions for research and industry. Unicom will continue to operate under its own brand and with a high degree of operational independence, in line with AddLife's decentralised business model.

"Joining AddLife marks an exciting new chapter for Unicom, giving us the opportunity to continue developing our business with the support of a long-term owner. AddLife's decentralised model provides both freedom and opportunity, while enabling us to further strengthen our offering and create value for our customers," says Daniel Ettlin, General Manager, Unicom Sistemas Analíticos

The closing took place on September 8, 2026. The acquisition is expected to have a marginal positive impact on AddLife's earnings per share during the current financial year.
